UT Southwestern’s Center for Depression Research and Clinical Care Clinical Research Experiences in Depression Internship Program (CRED) is committed to educating students to be tomorrow’s leaders in Clinical and Translational Depression Research and Mental Health!

The Center for Depression Research and Clinical Care (CDRC) at UT Southwestern is an internationally recognized Center leading the way in research and new treatments for depression. Our internship program offers a variety of learning opportunities, including:

- Essentials of clinical and translational research in depression
  - Research protocol design/development
  - Study implementation
  - Interpretation of research study results
  - Manuscript preparation
- Assessment tools for psychiatric diagnosis and symptom measurement
- Current and potential treatment approaches
- Approaches to increase screening and treatment of depression
- Novel research to increase our understanding of depression and its treatment

Interns will receive lectures from CDRC faculty and hands-on experience in different aspects of clinical and translational research. Interns will be expected to work on a mentored project that results in presentation at the end of the internship. Opportunities for inclusion in poster presentations and manuscript submissions may also be available.
